It is the privilege of antiquity to mingle divine things with human, and so to add dignity to the beginnings of cities; and if any people ought to be allowed to consecrate their origins and refer them to a divine source, so great is the military glory of the Roman People that when they profess that their Father and the Father of their Founder was none other than Mars, the nations of the earth may well submit to this also with as good a grace as they submit to Rome's dominion.

PREFACE

Why Eutropius?

Since the publication of War with Hannibal in 2009 I have heard from students, teachers, and independent learners alike how helpful Eutropius has been in making the transition from a Latin textbook to reading real Latin literature. Even purportedly easy authors like Caesar and Nepos are in reality too difficult without adequate preparation. Eutropius's vocabulary, style, and syntax provide an ideal foundation for reading authors such as these. He writes in good, standard classical Latin and uses nearly all of the most common and important grammatical constructions. His vocabulary, however, is quite simple, and his sentences are not overly long or complex. This gives students the opportunity to develop their skill and confidence in reading extended Latin prose, without getting lost in a morass of subordination or arcane vocabulary.

This new volume of Eutropius, then, is meant to contribute to the options available to those who wish to make a more seamless transition to Caesar or a similar author, while still using authentic Latin literature. It may be used on its own or in conjunction with War with Hannibal (the two volumes together include two complete books, approximately three thousand words, of Eutropius's Breviarium ab urbe condita).

Book I of the Breviarium covers a period of Roman history that should have wide appeal to both high school and college instructors: from the founding of the city in 753 BCE to the sack of Rome by the Gauls in 390 BCE. Eutropius's narrative is presented without any adaptations or omissions (except for the deletion of a single clause in the first sentence of chapter I and a short personal interjection addressed to the emperor Valens in chapter XII). Since the main source for Eutropius's abbreviation of Roman history was an Epitome of Livy, generous passages in English from Livy supplement the Latin text, adding color and detail to Eutropius's succinct account. Historical notes—set off in boxes for easy reference—are provided in the Commentary, with special attention to questions of historicity.

As with War with Hannibal, it typically takes three to four weeks to read this text in its entirety at the college level. Thus it may be used as the “pay-off” immediately after finishing an elementary textbook, or as an opportunity for review and reinforcement at the beginning of year two. At the high school level, either alone or in conjunction with War with Hannibal, the text provides an excellent foundation for the Caesar portions of the AP curriculum.

Format of This Edition

Since this text is meant to be a student's first encounter with continuous Latin prose, the amount of translation help given is quite liberal. It comes in a number of forms: The most basic glosses—the ones most readers will need to “get” the Latin—are beneath the text, where they are easily accessible. More in-depth translation help, formal analyses of the grammar and syntax, and historical notes are placed in the Commentary in the back of the book. This allows for an ample running commentary while leaving the simple glosses unencumbered.

The Commentary need not be read in its entirety but may be referred to on an as-needed basis. As such, basic translation help and identification of perfect participles, subjunctives, and the like are not phased out over the course of the notes. More lengthy discussions of grammar and syntax (e.g., regarding ablatives absolute and purpose clauses) take place only at the first occurrence of the element in question. Readers who would like to refer to these sections may easily do so by means of the Index of Selected Grammatical Constructions.

All grammatical principles in the Commentary are cross-referenced to Cambridge Latin Course: Unit 3, 4th Edition (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2002), Ecce Romani II, 4th Edition (Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice Hall, 2009), Jenney's Second Year Latin (Upper Saddle River, NJ: Prentice Hall, 1990), Latin: An Intensive Course (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1977), Latin for Americans, Level 2 (New York: Glencoe/McGraw-Hill, 2004), Latin for the New Millennium, Level 2 (Mundelein, IL: Bolchazy-Carducci, 2009), Learn to Read Latin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 2003), Oxford Latin Course, Part III, 2nd Edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1997), Wheelock's Latin, 7th Edition, Revised (New York: Harper Collins, 2011), and Allen and Greenough's New Latin Grammar (Boston: Ginn, 1903). This last is available online from the Perseus Digital Library at www.perseus.tufts.edu.

A section with only the bare Latin text has been included for use during classroom translation. Not having the notes under the student's eye in the classroom ensures that the glosses are not used as a crutch and that grammatical concepts have been thoroughly learned. The inclusion of the bare text as a separate section allows the "user-friendly" bottom-of-the-page glosses to be preserved in the Text and Notes section for the student's initial contact with the text.

The Appendices include maps of Rome and Latium in the fifth century BCE, and a bibliography lists those texts, commentaries, and translations of Eutropius most relevant to students. An Index of Selected Grammatical Constructions is included so that teachers may locate illustrative examples of particular constructions.

Vocabulary

The Vocabulary has been compiled specifically for Book I of Eutropius's Breviarium. The entries have been adapted in part from Lewis and Short's Latin Dictionary (New York: Harper and Brothers, 1897) and other standard lexica.

The Vocabulary also contains a number of features helpful to the beginning student: all forms whose dictionary entry might not be immediately recognized (e.g., irregular perfects, perfect participles) are given individual entries pointing to the relevant lexical form; the elements of all compound words are shown in brackets; basic biographical information is included for all historical persons; entries are given for all forms of personal names that appear in the text (e.g., praenomen abbreviations); specific passages in Book I of the Breviarium are referenced where it seemed necessary to clarify the usage of a word. The inclusion of all inflected forms of a word after the dictionary entry—an innovative feature in a Latin commentary—allows the student to confirm that he or she has found the correct entry for a particular word.

Latin Text

The established texts of the major critical editions (see Bibliography) differ in only a few places in all of Book I of the Breviarium. The overarching principle used for establishing the Latin text of this edition was that of following the reading easiest for the beginning student. Because of the nature of the work, discussions of manuscript variants have been kept to the barest of minimums. Macrons, including hidden quantities, have been added to the entire text.

English Translations of Livy

The English translations of Livy's Ab urbe condita are from Livy, Volume I, Books 1–2, Loeb Classical Library Volume 114, translated by B. O. Foster, 1919; Livy, Volume II, Books 3–4, Loeb Classical Library Volume 133, translated by B. O. Foster, 1922.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

There are many people to whom I owe a debt of gratitude for their help with this book. David Wright prepared a significant portion of the vocabulary and textbook cross-references. The ever-magnanimous Dale Grote and the eagle-eyed Allison Resnick read through the entire manuscript at an early stage and provided numerous, invaluable suggestions. My students at Montgomery High School suffered through the first drafts of this book and much improved it by their insights. Jason Barillaro, Ed DeHoratius, Rich Esswein, Anne Pearson, and Cary Riggs all kindly class-tested the book, and their students provided valuable feedback. I was extremely fortunate to have had Juliana Froggatt as the copy editor. Every page has been improved by her thoughtfulness and expertise. Finally, my wife Ruth, my son Benjamin, and my daughters Ariella and Eliana deserve much credit for putting up with my obsessiveness. Super omnia, carissimi mihi sunt.

INTRODUCTION

The aim of this book, like that of its predecessor, War with Hannibal, is simple: to make authentic, unadapted Latin prose accessible to the beginning student. It presents Book I of Eutropius's Breviarium ab urbe condita, which covers the period from the foundation of Rome in 753 BCE to the sack of the city by the Gauls in 390 BCE. Historical notes, providing context and addressing issues of historicity, can be found in the Commentary in the back of the book. For an excellent overview of this period, see the subentries "Origins of Rome" and "Early republic" under "Rome (History)" in the Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1996). For a more in-depth but highly accessible introduction to Rome's early history, see H. H. Scullard's A History of the Roman World: 753 to 146 BC (Abingdon, Oxfordshire: Routledge, 2012). For detailed coverage of historical and textual issues, see R. M. Ogilvie's A Commentary on Livy, Books 1–5 (New York: Oxford University Press, 1965).

History of the Breviarium ab urbe condita

Eutropius wrote the Breviarium ab urbe condita in the latter half of the fourth century CE, during the reign of the emperors Valens and Valentinian I. The work, which consists of ten books, begins with the foundation of Rome in 753 BCE and ends with the death of the emperor Jovian in 364 CE. It was written for an aristocracy whose first language was often not Latin and who needed a succinct and readable history of Rome. It immediately became popular both in the West and, in translation, in the Byzantine world. Its popularity in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance is attested by the survival of more than eighty manuscripts, eleven from before the fifteenth century. The Breviarium even made it onto Petrarch's short list of favorite books (Libri mei peculiaries) from 1333.

In the modern era, the Breviarium became a staple of the school curriculum in both the United States and Britain and was very often the first Latin text a student read. Many nineteenth-century educators regarded Caesar's Commentarii de bello Gallico as too difficult for use as a first Latin text and saw the Breviarium as an ideal "bridge text." The Report of the Committee of Twelve of the American Philological Association in 1899, for instance, suggests reading Eutropius just before Caesar. Similarly, Arrowsmith and Whicher's popular nineteenth-century reader includes three entire books of Eutropius before moving on to Caesar.

The Breviarium enjoyed a publication history from the eighteenth through the early twentieth century comparable to or greater than that of almost any other Latin text read in schools. In 1902, for example, there were no fewer than fourteen editions of the Breviarium in print in the United States and Britain. By contrast, in the same year there was a combined total of only ten editions of all works by Nepos in print. Furthermore, a number of editions of Eutropius enjoyed continuous reprints throughout the first half of the twentieth century. It was not until the late 1950s (a time when there was a new emphasis on introducing increasingly adult-age Latin students to Cicero and similar writers as soon as possible) that the last school edition of the Breviarium finally went out of print.

Life of Eutropius

Little is known about Eutropius. Apparently, he was from a wealthy but not senatorial family and was given a good education. He began a career as an imperial clerk under the emperor Constantine. We learn from a comment in the Breviarium that he served under the emperor Julian in his expedition against the Persians in 363 CE. Under the emperor Valens (to whom the Breviarium is dedicated), Eutropius was promoted to the senior imperial Secretariat (as magister memoriae). His survey of Roman history is his only work that has been preserved.

ROMULUS AND REMUS

Since the brothers were twins, and respect for their age could not determine between them, it was agreed that the gods who had those places in their protection should choose by augury who should give the new city its name, who should govern it when built. . . . Thereupon each was saluted king by his own followers, the one party laying claim to the honour from priority, the other from the number of the birds. They then engaged in a battle of words and, angry taunts leading to bloodshed, Remus was struck down in the affray. The commoner story is that Remus leaped over the new walls in mockery of his brother, whereupon Romulus in great anger slew him, and in menacing wise added these words withal, "So perish whoever else shall leap over my walls!" Thus Romulus acquired sole power, and the city, thus founded, was called by its founder's name.

Livy, Ab urbe condita 1.6–7

THE RAPE OF THE SABINE WOMEN

When the time came for the show, and people's thoughts and eyes were busy with it, the preconcerted attack began. At a given signal the young Romans darted this way and that, to seize and carry off the maidens. In most cases these were taken by the men in whose path they chanced to be. Some, of exceptional beauty, had been marked out for the chief senators, and were carried off to their houses by plebeians to whom the office had been entrusted. . . . The sports broke up in a panic, and the parents of the maidens fled sorrowing. They charged the Romans with the crime of violating hospitality, and invoked the gods to whose solemn games they had come, deceived in violation of religion and honour. The stolen maidens were no more hopeful of their plight, nor less indignant. But Romulus himself went amongst them and explained that the pride of their parents had caused this deed, when they had refused their neighbours the right to intermarry; nevertheless the daughters should be wedded and become co-partners in all the possessions of the Romans, in their citizenship and, dearest privilege of all to the human race, in their children; only let them moderate their anger, and give their hearts to those to whom fortune had given their persons. A sense of injury had often given place to affection, and they would find their husbands the kinder for this reason, that every man would earnestly endeavour not only to be a good husband, but also to console his wife for the home and parents she had lost.

Livy, Ab urbe condita 1.9

12. Commōtis bellīs – with war having been stirred up = when war broke out.

THE DEATH OF ROMULUS

When these deathless deeds had been done, as the king was holding a muster in the Campus Martius, near the swamp of Capra, for the purpose of reviewing the army, suddenly a storm came up, with loud claps of thunder, and enveloped him in a cloud so thick as to hide him from the sight of the assembly; and from that moment Romulus was no more on earth. The Roman soldiers at length recovered from their panic, when this hour of wild confusion had been succeeded by a sunny calm; but when they saw that the royal seat was empty, although they readily believed the assertion of the senators, who had been standing next to Romulus, that he had been caught up on high in the blast, they nevertheless remained for some time sorrowful and silent, as if filled with the fear of orphanhood. Then, when a few men had taken the initiative, they all with one accord hailed Romulus as a god and a god's son, the King and Father of the Roman City.

Livy, Ab urbe condita 1.16

15. nōn compāruisset – he had not appeared.
annō . . . trīcēsīmō septimō – in the thirty-seventh year.
 16. trānsisse crēditus est – he was thought to have crossed over.
cōsecrātus = cōsecrātus est.
Rōmae – at Rome (also at line 23).
per quīnōs diēs – for five days each.
 17. hīs rēgnantibus – with these reigning = under their rule.

Numa Pompilius, 715–672 BCE

III. Postea Numa Pompilius rex creatus est, qui bellum quidem nullum gessit, sed non minus civitati quam Romulus profuit. Nam et leges 20
 Romanis moresque constituit, qui consuetudine proeliorum iam latrones ac semibarbari putabantur, et annum descripsit in decem menses prius sine aliqua supputatione confusum, et infinita Romanae sacra ac templa constituit. Morbo decessit quadragesimo et tertio imperii anno.

NUMA'S ACHIEVEMENTS

When he had thus obtained the kingship, he prepared to give the new City, founded by force of arms, a new foundation in law, statutes, and observances. . . . He thought the very first thing to do, as being the most efficacious with a populace which was ignorant and, in those early days, uncivilized, was to imbue them with the fear of Heaven. . . . But of all his services the greatest was this, that throughout his reign he guarded peace no less jealously than his kingdom. Thus two successive kings in different ways, one by war, the other by peace, promoted the nation's welfare. Romulus ruled

Tullus Hostilius, 672–642 BCE

- 25 IV. Huic successit Tullus Hostilius. Hic bella reparāvit, Albānōs vīcit, quī ab urbe Rōmā duodecimō mīliārīō sunt, Vēientēs et Fīdēnātēs, quōrum aliī sextō mīliārīō absunt ab urbe Rōmā, aliī octāvō decimō, bellō superāvit, urbem ampliāvit, adiectō Caeliō monte. Cum trīgintā et duōs annōs rēgnāset, fulmine ictus cum domō suā ārsit.

THE CHARACTER OF TULLUS HOSTILIUS

This monarch was not only unlike the last, but was actually more warlike than Romulus had been. Besides his youth and strength, the glory of his grandfather [Hostus Hostilius] was also an incentive to him. So, thinking that the nation was growing decrepit from inaction, he everywhere sought excuses for stirring up war.

Livy, Ab urbe condita 1.22

25. Huic successit – succeeded him.
26. ab urbe Rōmā duodecimō mīliārīō – at the twelfth mile marker from the city Rome = twelve miles from Rome.

bellō – in war.
28. adiectō – having been added.
29. rēgnāset = rēgnāvisset.
fulmine ictus – having been struck by lightning = after he had been struck by lightning.
cum domō suā – together with his house.

Ancus Marcius, 642–616 BCE

V. Post hunc Ancus Mārcius, Numae ex filiā nepōs, suscēpit imperium. 30 Contrā Latīnōs dīmīcāvit, Aventīnum montem cīvitatī adiēcīt et Iāniculum, apud ōstium Tiberis cīvitatē suprā mare sextō decimō mīliariō ab urbe Rōmā condidit. Vīcēsīmō et quārtō annō imperiī morbō periit.

AN ETRUSCAN ENTERS ROME

In the reign of Ancus one Lucumo, a man of energy and wealth, took up his residence in Rome, chiefly from ambition and the hope that he might there achieve a station such as he had found no opportunity of attaining in Tarquinii. . . . [He and his wife Tanaquil] had come, as it happened, as far as Janiculum, when, as they were sitting in their covered waggon, an eagle poised on its wings gently descended upon them and plucked off Lucumo's cap, after which, rising noisily above the car and again stooping, as if sent from heaven for that service, it deftly replaced the cap upon his head, and departed on high. This augury was joyfully accepted, it is said, by Tanaquil, who was a woman skilled in celestial prodigies, as was the case with most Etruscans. Embracing her husband, she bade him expect transcendent greatness: such was the meaning of that bird, appearing from that quarter of the sky, and bringing tidings from that god; the highest part of the man had been concerned in the omen; the eagle had removed the adornment placed upon a mortal's head that it might restore it with the divine approbation. Such were their hopes and their reflections as they entered the City.

Having obtained a house, they gave out the name of Lucius Tarquinius Priscus. The Romans regarded him with special interest, as a stranger and a man of wealth, and he steadily pushed his fortune by his own exertions, making friends wherever possible, by kind words, courteous hospitality, and benefactions, until his reputation extended even to the palace.

Tarquinius Priscus, 616–579 BCE

VI. Deinde rēgnum Priscus Tarquinius accēpit. Hic numerum senātōrum

PRODIGIUM VISU EVENTUQUE MIRABILE

At this time there happened in the house of the king a portent which was remarkable alike in its manifestation and in its outcome. The story is that while a child named Servius Tullius lay sleeping, his head burst into flames in the sight of many. The general outcry which so great a miracle called forth brought the king [Tarquinius] and queen [Tanaquil] to the place. One of the servants fetched water to quench the fire, but was checked by the queen, who stilled the uproar and commanded that the boy should not be disturbed until he awoke of himself. Soon afterwards sleep left him, and with it disappeared the flames. Then, taking her husband aside, Tanaquil said: "Do you see this child whom we are bringing up in so humble a fashion? Be assured he will one day be a lamp to our dubious fortunes, and a protector to the royal house in the day of its distress. Let us therefore rear with all solicitude one who will lend high renown to the state and to our family."

Livy, Ab urbe condita I.39

Servius Tullius, 579–534 BCE

VII. Post hunc Servius Tullius suscepit imperium, genitus ex nōbili fēminā, captīvā tamen et ancillā. The knife he then passed to Collatinus, and from him to Lucretius and Valerius. They were dumbfounded at this miracle. Whence came this new spirit in the breast of Brutus [who had been feigning madness]? As he bade them, so they swore. TO REGAIN HIS COUNTRY AND HIS SOVEREIGNTY [Tarquinius Superbus] believed it was time to contrive an open war. He therefore went about as a suppliant amongst the cities of Etruria, directing his prayers chiefly to the Veientes and the Tarquinienses. Reminding them that he had come from them and was of the same blood as themselves, and that exile and poverty had followed hard upon his loss of what had been but now great power, he besought them not to let him perish, with his youthful sons, before their very eyes. . . . He himself, while actually king, and enlarging Rome's sway by war, had been driven out by his next-of-kin in a wicked conspiracy. His enemies, perceiving that no single claimant was fit to be king, had seized and usurped the power amongst themselves, and had given up his goods to be plundered by the people, that none might be without a share in the guilt. He wished to regain his country and his sovereignty, and to punish the ungrateful Romans. . . . So it came about that two armies, representing two nations, followed Tarquinius, to regain his kingdom for him and to chastise the Romans.

ROMANUS SUM CIVIS

Gaius Mucius, a young Roman noble, thinking it a shame that although the Roman People had not, in the days of their servitude when they lived under kings, been blockaded in a war by any enemies, they should now, when free, be besieged by those same Etruscans whose armies they had so often routed, made up his mind that this indignity must be avenged by some great and daring deed. At first he intended to make his way to the enemy's camp on his own account. . . . Hiding a sword under his dress, he set out. Arrived at the camp, he took up his stand in the thick of the crowd near the royal tribunal. It happened that at that moment the soldiers were being paid; a secretary who sat beside the king, and wore nearly the same costume, was very busy, and to him the soldiers for the most part addressed themselves. Mucius was afraid to ask which was Porsinna, lest his ignorance of the king's identity should betray his own, and following the blind guidance of Fortune, slew the secretary instead of the king. . . . There was an outcry, and thereat the royal guards came running in from every side, seized him and dragged him back before the tribunal of the king. But friendless as he was, even then, when Fortune wore so menacing an aspect, yet as one more to be feared than fearing, "I am a Roman citizen," he cried; "men call me Gaius Mucius. I am your enemy, and as an enemy I would have slain you; I can die as resolutely as I could kill: both to do and to endure valiantly is the Roman way. Nor am I the only one to carry this resolution against you: behind me is a long line of men who are seeking the same honour. . . . Such is the war we, the Roman youths, declare on you. . . ." The king, at once hot with resentment and aghast at his danger, angrily ordered the prisoner to be flung into the flames unless he should at once divulge the plot with which he so obscurely threatened him. Whereupon Mucius, exclaiming, "Look, that you may see how cheap they hold their bodies whose eyes are fixed upon renown!" thrust his hand into the fire that was kindled for the sacrifice.

THE FABLE OF AGRIPPA MENENIUS

[The senate] therefore decided to send as an ambassador to the commons Agrippa Menenius, an eloquent man and dear to the plebeians as being one of themselves by birth. On being admitted to the camp he is said merely to have related the following apologue, in the quaint and uncouth style of that age: In the days when man's members did not all agree amongst themselves, as is now the case, but had each its own ideas and a voice of its own, the other parts thought it unfair that they should have the worry and the trouble and the labour of providing everything for the belly, while the belly remained quietly in their midst with nothing to do but to enjoy the good things which they bestowed upon it; they therefore conspired together that the hands should carry no food to the mouth, nor the mouth accept anything that was given it, nor the teeth grind up what they received. While they sought in this angry spirit to starve the belly into submission, the members themselves and the whole body were reduced to the utmost weakness. Hence it had become clear that even the belly had no idle task to perform, and was no more nourished than it nourished the rest, by giving out to all parts of the body that by which we live and thrive, when it has been divided equally amongst the veins and is enriched with digested food—that is, the blood. Drawing a parallel from this to show how like was the internal dissension of the bodily members to the anger of the plebs against the Fathers, he prevailed upon the minds of his hearers.

THE LAST STAND OF THE THREE HUNDRED FABII

As the Etruscans drew together and the Romans were now fenced in by a continuous line of armed men, the harder the enemy pressed them the smaller was the space within which they themselves were forced to contract their circle, a thing which clearly revealed both their own fewness and the vast numbers of the Etruscans, whose ranks were multiplied in the narrow space. The Romans then gave up the fight which they had been directing equally at every point, and all turned in one direction. Thither, by dint of main strength and arms, they forced their way with a wedge. Their road led up a gentle acclivity. There they at first made a stand; presently, when their superior position had afforded them time to breathe and to collect their spirits after so great a fright, they actually routed the troops which were advancing to dislodge them; and a handful of men, with the aid of a good position, were winning the victory, when the Veientes who had been sent round by the ridge emerged upon the crest of the hill, thus giving the enemy the advantage again. The Fabii were all slain to a man, and their fort was stormed. Three hundred and six men perished, as is generally agreed; one, who was little more than a boy in years, survived to maintain the Fabian stock, and so to afford the very greatest help to the Roman People in its dark hours, on many occasions, at home and in the field.

THEY WERE MEN, AND ARMED

As Verginius spoke these words in a loud voice, the multitude signified with responsive shouts that they would not forget his sufferings nor fail to vindicate their liberty. And the civilians, mingling with the crowd, repeated the same complaints and told them how much more shameful the thing would have appeared if they could have seen it instead of hearing about it. . . . They induced the troops to raise the cry "To arms!" and to pluck up their standards and set out for Rome. The decemvirs, troubled alike by what they saw and by what they heard had taken place in Rome, rushed through the camp, one this way, another that, to still the rising. And so long as they mildly remonstrated, they got no answer; but if one of them tried to use his authority, they told him that they were men, and armed.

VAE VICTIS!

Day after day [the Romans] looked out to see if any relief from the dictator was at hand; but at last even hope, as well as food, beginning to fail them, and their bodies growing almost too weak to sustain their armour when they went out on picket duty, they declared that they must either surrender or ransom themselves, on whatever conditions they could make; for the Gauls were hinting very plainly that no great price would be required to induce them to raise the siege. Thereupon the senate met, and instructed the tribunes of the soldiers to arrange the terms. Then, at a conference between Quintus Sulpicius the tribune and the Gallic chieftain Brennus, the affair was settled, and a thousand pounds of gold was agreed on as the price of a people that was destined presently to rule the nations. The transaction was a foul disgrace in itself, but an insult was added thereto: the weights brought by the Gauls were dishonest, and on the tribune's objecting, the insolent Gaul added his sword to the weight, and a saying intolerable to Roman ears was heard—

been consummated, and when the gold had not yet, owing to the dispute, been all weighed out, the dictator appeared and commanded the gold to be cleared away and the Gauls to leave. They objected vehemently, and insisted on the compact; but Camillus denied the validity of that compact which, subsequently to his own appointment as dictator, an inferior magistrate had made without his authorization, and warned them to prepare for battle. His own men he ordered to throw their packs in a heap, make ready their weapons, and win their country back with iron instead of gold; having before their eyes the temples of the gods, their wives and their children, the soil of their native land, with the hideous marks of war upon it, and all that religion called upon them to defend, recover, or avenge. He then drew up his line, as well as the ground permitted, on the naturally uneven surface of the half-ruined City, and saw to it that his soldiers had every advantage in choice of position and in preparation which the art of war suggested. The Gauls were taken aback; they armed, and, with more rage than judgment, charged the Romans. But now fortune had turned; now the might of Heaven and human wisdom were engaged in the cause of Rome. Accordingly, at the first shock the Gauls were routed with as little effort as they had themselves put forth to conquer on the Allia. They afterwards fought a second, more regular engagement, eight miles out on the Gabinian Way, where they had rallied from their flight, and again the generalship and auspices of Camillus overcame them. Here the carnage was universal; their camp was taken; and not a man survived to tell of the disaster. The dictator, having recovered his country from her enemies, returned in triumph to the city; and between the rough jests uttered by the soldiers, was hailed in no unmeaning terms of praise as a Romulus and Father of his Country and a second Founder of the City.

Romulus and the foundation of Rome, 753–715 BCE

I. Rōmānum imperium ā Rōmulō exōrdium habet, quī Rēae Silviae, Vestālis virginis, filius et, quantum putātus est, Mārtis cum Remō frātre ūnō partū ēditus est. Is, cum inter pāstōrēs latrōcinārētur, decem et octō annōs nātus urbem exiguam in Palātīnō monte cōstituit XI Kal. Maiās, Olympi-adis sextae annō tertiō, post Trōiae excidium, ut quī plūrimum minimum- 5 que trādunt, annō trecentēsīmō nōnāgēsīmō quārtō.

II. Conditā cīvitate, quam ex nōmine suō Rōmam vocāvit, haec ferē ēgit:
multitūdinem finitimōrum in cīvitatē recēpit, centum ex seniōribus lēgit, quōrum cōsiliō omnia ageret, quōs senātōrēs nōmināvit propter senectūtem. Tum, cum uxōrēs ipse et populus suus nōn habērent, invītāvit 10 ad spectāculum lūdōrum vīcīnās urbī Rōmae nātiōnēs atque eārum vir-ginēs rapuit. Commōtis bellis propter raptārum iniūriam Caenīnēsēs vīcit, Antemnātēs, Crustumīnōs, Sabīnōs, Fīdēnātēs, Vēientēs. Haec omnia oppida urbem cingunt.

Et cum, ortā subitō tempestāte, nōn compāruisset, annō rēgnī trīcēsīmō 15 septīmō ad deōs trānsisse crēditus est et cōsecrātus. Deinde Rōmae per quīnōs diēs senātōrēs imperāvērunt et hīs rēgnantibus annus ūnus complētus est.

Numa Pompilius, 715–672 BCE

20 III. Postea Numa Pompilius rex creatus est, qui bellum quidem nullum gessit, sed non minus civitati quam Romulus profuit. Nam et leges Romanis morisque constituit, qui consuetudine proeliorum iam latrones ac semibarbari putabantur, et annum descripsit in decem menses prius sine aliqua supputatione confusum, et infinita Romae sacra ac templa constituit. Morbo decessit quadragesimo et tertio imperii anno.

Tullus Hostilius, 672–642 BCE

25 IV. Huic successit Tullus Hostilius. Hic bella reparavit, Albanos vicit, qui ab urbe Roma duodecimo milia sunt, Veienses et Fidenates, quorum alii sexto milia absunt ab urbe Roma, alii octavo decimo, bello superavit, urbem ampliavit, adiecto Caelio monte. Cum triginta et duos annos regnasset, fulmine ictus cum domo sua arsit.

Ancus Marcius, 642–616 BCE

30 V. Post hunc Ancus Marcius, Numae ex filia nepos, suscepit imperium. Contra Latinos dimicavit, Aventinum montem civitati adiecit et Ianiculum, apud ostium Tiberis civitatem supra mare sexto decimo milia ab urbe Roma condidit. Vicesimo et quarto anno imperii morbo periit.

Tarquinius Priscus, 616–578 BCE

35 VI. Deinde regnum Priscus Tarquinius accipit. Hic numerum senatorum duplicavit, circum Romae aedificavit, ludos Romanos instituit, qui ad nostram memoriam permanent. Vicit idem etiam Sabinos et non parum agrōrum sublātum īsdem urbis Rōmae territōriō iūnxit, prīmusque triumphāns urbem intrāvit. Mūrōs fēcit et cloācās, Capitōlium inchoāvit. Tricēsimo octāvō imperiī annō per Ancī filiōs occīsus est, rēgis eius cui ipse successerat.

Servius Tullius, 579–534 BCE

VII. Post hunc Servius Tullius suscepit imperium, genitus ex nōbili fēminā, captivā tamen et ancillā. Hic quoque Sabīnōs subēgit, montēs trēs, Quirīnālem, Viminālem, Ēsquilīnum, urbī adiūnxit, fossās circum mūrū dūxit. Prīmus omnium cēsum ordināvit, quī adhūc per orbem terrārum incognitus erat. Sub eō, Rōma, omnibus in cēsum dēlātīs, habuit capita LXXXIII mīlia cīvium Rōmānōrum cum hīs quī in agrīs erant. Occīsus est scelere generī suī Tarquiniī Superbī, filiī eius rēgis, cui ipse successerat, et filiae, quam Tarquinius habēbat uxōrem.

Tarquinius Superbus, 534–510 BCE

VIII. L. Tarquinius Superbus, septimus atque ultimus rēgum, Volscōs, quae gēns ad Campāniam euntibus nōn longē ab urbe est, vīcit, Gabiōs cīvitatē et Suessam Pōmētiam subēgit, cum Tuscīs pācem fēcit et templum Iovis in Capitōliō aedificāvit. Postea, Ardeam oppugnāns, in octāvō decimō mīliariō ab urbe Rōmā positam cīvitatē, imperium perdidit. Nam cum filius eius, et ipse Tarquinius iūnior, nōbilissimam fēminam Lucretiam eandemque pudicissimam, Collātīnī uxōrem, stuprāsset eaque dē iniuriā marītō et patrī et amīcīs quēsta fuisset, in omnium cōspectū sē occīdit. Propter quam causam Brūtus, parēns et ipse Tarquiniī, populum concitāvit et Tarquiniō adēmit imperium. Mox exercitus quoque eum, quī cīvitatē Ardeam cum ipsō rēge oppugnābat, reliquit; veniēnsque ad urbem rēx, portīs clausīs, exclūsus est, cumque imperāsset annōs quattuor et vīgintī cum uxōre et liberīs suīs fūgit. Ita Rōmae rēgnātum est per septem rēgēs annīs ducentīs quadrāgintā tribus, cum adhūc Rōma, ubi plūrimum, vix ūsque ad quīntum decimum mīliarium possidēret.

Founding of the Republic, 509 BCE

IX. Hinc cōsulēs coepēre, prō ūnō rēge duo, hāc causā creātī, ut, sī ūnus 65 malus esse voluisset, alter eum, habēns potestātem similem, coerceret. Et placuit, nē imperium longius quam annum habērent, nē per diūturni-tatem potestātis insolentiōrēs redderentur, sed cīvīlēs semper essent, quī sē post annum scīrent futūrōs esse prīvātōs. Fuērunt igitur, annō prīmō expulsīs rēgibus, cōsulēs L. Iūnius Brūtus, quī maximē ēgerat ut Tarqui-70 nius pelleretur, et Tarquinius Collātīnus, marītus Lucretiae. Sed Tarquiniō Collātīnō statim sublāta est dignitās. Placuerat enim, nē quisquam in urbe remaneret quī Tarquinius vocārētur. Ergō, acceptō omnī patrimonīō suō, ex urbe migrāvit, et locō ipsīus factus est L. Valerius Pūblicola cōsul.
 Commōvit tamen bellum urbī Rōmae rēx Tarquinius, quī fuerat expulsus, 75 et collēctīs multīs gentibus, ut in rēgnum posset restituī dīmīcāvit.

War with Tarquinius Superbus, 509 BCE

X. In prīmā pugnā Brūtus cōsul et Arrūns, Tarquiniī filius, in vicem sē occīdērunt, Rōmānī tamen ex eā pugnā victōrēs recessērunt. Brūtum mātṛōnae Rōmānae, dēfēnsōrem pudīcitiae suae, quasi commūnem patrem per annum lūxērunt. Valerius Pūblicola Sp. Lucretium Tricipitīnum 80 collēgam sibi fēcīt, Lucretiae patrem, quō morbō mortuō iterum Horā-tium Pulvillum collēgam sibi sūmpsīt. Ita prīmus annus quīnque cōn-sulēs habuit, cum Tarquinius Collātīnus propter nōmen urbe cessisset, Brūtus in proeliō perīssēt, Sp. Lucretius morbō mortuus esset.

War with Lars Porsenna, 508 BCE

XI. Secundō quoque annō iterum Tarquinius, ut reciperetur in rēgnum, 85 bellum Rōmānīs intulit, auxilium eī ferente Porsennā, Tusciae rēge, et Rōmam paene cēpit. Vērū tum quoque victus est. Tertiō annō post rēgēs exāctōs, Tarquinius, cum suscipī nōn posset in rēgnum neque eī Porsenna, quī pācem cum Rōmānīs fēcerat, praestāret auxilium, Tusculum sē contulit, quae cīvitās nōn longē ab urbe est, atque ibi per quattuordecim annōs prīvātus cum uxōre cōsensuit.

90

Quārtō annō post rēgēs exāctōs, cum Sabīnī Rōmānīs bellum intulissent, victī sunt et dē hīs triumphātum est. Quīntō annō L. Valerius ille, Brūtī collēga et quater cōsul, fātālīter mortuus est, adeō pauper ut, collātīs ā populō nummīs, sūmptum habuerit sepultūrae. Quem mātrōnae sicutī Brūtum annum lūxērunt.

The Dictatorship, 501 BCE

XII. Nōnō annō post rēgēs exāctōs, cum gener Tarquiniī ad iniūriam so- cerī vindicandam ingentem collēgisset exercitum, nova Rōmae dignitās est creāta, quae dictātūra appellātur, maior quam cōsulātus. Eōdem annō etiam magister equitum factus est, quī dictātōrī obsequerētur. Dictātor autem Rōmae prīmus fuit T. Larcus, magister equitum prīmus Sp. Cassius.

Secession of the Plebeians, 494 BCE

XIII. Sextō decimō annō post rēgēs exāctōs, sēditiōnem populus Rōmae fēcīt, tamquam ā senātū atque cōsulibus premerētur. Tum et ipse sibi tribūnōs plēbis quasi propriōs iūdicēs et dēfēnsōrēs creāvit, per quōs contrā senātum et cōsulēs tūtus esse posset.

War with the Volsci, 493 BCE

XIV. Sequentī annō Volscī contrā Rōmānōs bellum reparāvērunt, et victī aciē etiam Coriolōs cīvitātem, quam habēbant optimam, perdidērunt.

Coriolanus, 491 BCE

XV. Octāvō decimō annō postquam rēgēs ēiectī erant, expulsus ex urbe Q. Mārcius, dux Rōmānus, quī Coriolōs cēperat, Volscōrum cīvitātem, ad ipsōs Volscōs contendit irātus et auxilia contrā Rōmānōs accēpit. Rōmānōs

110 saepe vicit, usque ad quintum miliarium urbis accessit, oppugnaturus etiam patriam suam, legatis qui pacem petebant repudiatis, nisi ad eum mater Veturia et uxor Volumnia ex urbe venissent, quarum fletu et deprecatione superatus removit exercitum. Atque hic secundus post Tarquinium fuit, qui dux contra patriam suam esset.

Disaster at Cremera, 479 BCE

115 XVI. C. Fabius et L. Virginius consulibus, trecenti nobiles homines, qui ex Fabia familia erant, contra Veientes bellum soli suscepērunt, promittentes senatu et populo per se omne certamen implendum. Itaque profecti, omnes nobiles et qui singuli magnorum exercituum ducēs esse debērent, in proelio conciderunt. Unus omnino superfuit ex tanta familia, qui pro-pter aetatem puerilem duci non potuerat ad pugnam. Post haec census in 120 urbe habitus est et inventa sunt civium capita CXVII milia CCCXIX.

Cincinnatus, 458 BCE

XVII. Sequenti anno cum in Algidō monte ab urbe duodecimo ferme miliario Romanus obsideretur exercitus, L. Quintius Cincinnatus dictator est factus, qui agrum quattuor iugerum possidens manibus suis colebat.
125 Is cum in opere et arans esset inventus, sudore detersō togam praetextam accēpit et caesis hostibus liberavit exercitum.

The Decemviri, 451–449 BCE

XVIII. Anno trecentesimo et altero ab urbe condita imperium consulare cessavit et pro duobus consulibus decem facti sunt, qui summam potestatem haberent, decemviri nominati. Sed cum primo anno bene 130 egerissent, secundo unus ex his, Ap. Claudius, Virginius cuiusdam, qui ho-nestis iam stipendiis contra Latinos in monte Algidō militarat, filiam virginem corrumpere voluit; quam pater occidit, ne stuprum a decemviro sustineret, et regressus ad milites movit tumultum. Sublata est decem-viris potestas ipsique damnati sunt.

Chapter I

1. Rōmānum imperium – A slightly more expected word order would be imperium Rōmānum; the emphatic word order makes Rōmānum the first word of the entire work. Imperium may here be translated as empire; its basic meaning is power or authority to command.

Rōmulō . . . Remō frātre – Romulus and Remus are the twin brothers central to Rome's foundation legend. The name Romulus is a back-formation from the name of the city itself, and simply means Roman. Remus may be an alternate version of the same name, later misunderstood to be a different person and incorporated into the narrative.

Rēae Silviae, Vestālis virginis – genitives modifying filius.

2. filius – in apposition to quī (W 25, LFA 8, A&G §282).

quantum putātus est – as he was thought. This wording is used to distance the author from the supernatural elements of the narrative. putātus est – perfect passive of putō, -āre; note that the masculine ending indicates the personal construction (the subject is he, not the impersonal it) (A&G §582).

ūnō partū – ablative of manner (W 116–17, ER 347, CLC 326–27, A&G §412).

3. ēditus est – perfect passive of ēdō, -ere.

Vestālis virginis – The Vestal Virgins were attendants to the Roman hearth goddess, Vesta. The cult of Vesta was one of the oldest and most important at Rome.

Is, cum inter pāstōrēs latrōcinārētur, . . . urbem exiguam in Palātīnō monte cōstituit – The version of the story given by the Roman historian Livy (whose work, in an epitomized form, was Eutropius’s main source for this period) is as follows. Numitor, the king of Alba Longa, a small city near Rome founded by Aeneas’s son Ascanius, was deposed by his brother Amulius. To prevent the birth of potential rivals to the throne, Amulius made Numitor’s daughter, Rea Silvia, a Vestal Virgin. Rea, however, was raped by Mars and gave birth to twins. On the king’s orders, the twins were thrown into the Tiber River. A passing female wolf—an animal sacred to Mars—heard the babies’ cries and nursed them until they were discovered by the shepherd Faustulus. The boys were raised by Faustulus and distinguished themselves in strength and courage. They developed a following of young men by attacking brigands and distributing the plunder among the local shepherds. After learning their true identity, Romulus and Remus restored the rightful king Numitor to his throne. The twins then decided to found their own city on the site of the Tiber where they had been abandoned as babies.

cum inter pāstōrēs latrōcinārētur – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, CLC 70, LFNM 260–61, A&G §546); latrōcinārētur is an imperfect subjunctive of the deponent verb latrōcinor, -ārī. It is usually best to translate the subjunctive in a cum clause as the indicative of the corresponding tense (e.g., translate latrōcinārētur as latrōcinābatur, was leading the life of a bandit).

decem et octō annōs nātus – The Romans counted the birth year and the current year inclusively, so having been born eighteen years would be at seventeen years of age in a noninclusive counting. nātus – perfect participle of the deponent verb nāscor, nāscī.

4. Palātīnō monte – Archeological evidence supports the primacy of the Palatine in the very early history of the city, and the eighth centure BCE as the date of the earliest settlements there. For locations of the seven hills of Rome, see Appendix A: Maps.

XI Kal. Maiās – The date April 21 coincided with the Parilia, the festival in honor of the shepherd deity Pales. This was one of the oldest religious festivals at Rome.

Olympiadis sextae annō tertiō – The Greek Olympiad was a four-year period reckoned from each Olympic game. The first Olympic game was held in 776 BCE, making the third year of the sixth Olympiad either 754 or 753 BCE, depending on the method of calculation used.

Olympiadis – genitive modifying annō tertiō.

5. annō tertiō and annō trecentēsīmō nōnāgēsīmō quārtō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFN 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423).

post Trōiae excidium . . . annō trecentēsīmō nōnāgēsīmō quārtō – The English word order would be annō trecentēsīmō nōnāgēsīmō quārtō post excidium Trōiae.

post Trōiae excidium – The reference to the fall of Troy alludes to the tradition that the Trojan prince Aeneas was the progenitor of the Romans. This tradition is thought to have become current at a later date than that of the Romulus legend (that is, after contact with Greeks from Asia Minor or Sicily). Originally, the two stories were mutually exclusive: the traditional dates for the fall of Troy and the foundation of Rome are separated by some four hundred years. Later historians synthesized the two stories by having Aeneas's son found Alba Longa, a small city near Rome, and inserting a reign of twelve Alban kings.

6. annō trecentēsīmō nōnāgēsīmō quārtō – The date that Eutropius gives here for the fall of Troy, 1148 BCE, is slightly later than the more widely used date given by the Greek mathematician Eratosthenes, 1183 BCE.

Chapter II

7. Conditā cīvitatē – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). It usually makes better English to translate the ablative absolute as a subordinate clause and choose an appropriate conjunction such as when, since, although, or after (e.g., after the city had been founded instead of the more literal with the city having been founded). The active voice also makes slightly better English, even though the Latin is passive. Conditā – perfect passive participle of condō, -ere. cīvitatē – Eutropius uses cīvītās as a synonym for urbs, city. This is a late usage (in classical Latin, cīvītās means state or citizenship). Notice that the word for city in many of the Romance languages comes from this late usage: città, ciudad, cidade, city.

quam – The antecedent is cīvitatē.

haec – plural substantive (W 27, ER 349, LFNM 475, A&G §288) from hic, haec, hoc; translate here as this, rather than the more literal these things.

ēgit – perfect of agō, -ere.

8. multitūdinem finitimōrum in cīvitatē recēpit, centum ex seniōribus lēgit – The omission of a conjunction between clauses is called asyndeton. finitimōrum – partitive genitive (W 124, ER 342, LFA 25, CLC 324, A&G §346). centum ex seniōribus – Ex or dē with the ablative is often used with cardinal numbers (literally one hundred from the elders) (W 125, ER 342, A&G §346c). Compare this construction to the partitive genitive, finitimōrum, in the previous clause.

centum ex seniōribus . . . quōs senātōrēs nōmināvit – The senate was an advisory body that originated in the Regal period and continued through the Republic and the Empire. Eutropius’s account of an original senate of one hundred members is traditional. For the increase in the number of senators during the later Regal period, see the note for numerum senātōrum duplicāvit, line 34.

9. quōrum cōnsiliō omnia ageret – purpose clause introduced by the relative pronoun (W 328, LFNM 509, CLC 179, A&G §531.2). As in ut-purpose clauses, the imperfect subjunctive may be rendered with the English auxiliary might (by whose advice he might manage all things) or with the English infinitive (to manage all things by their advice). cōnsiliō – ablative of means or instrument (W 116, ER 346, LFA 20, LFNM 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409). omnia – plural substantive (W 35, ER 349, A&G §288) from omnis, omne.
10. cum . . . nōn habērent – cum clause (causal) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 265, A&G §549). Render cum in this clause as since.
- uxōrēs – object of habērent.

11. vīcīnās urbī Rōmae nātiōnēs – The neighbors here are the Sabines, a central Apennine people who also inhabited Latium during Rome’s early history (see Appendix A: Maps). According to the Roman historical tradition, after peace was established between the two peoples, the Romans and the Sabines formed a single state, with their kings—Romulus and Titus Tatius—ruling jointly. Linguistic and archeological evidence supports a very early Sabine element in Roman culture.

vīcīnās urbī Rōmae nātiōnēs – vīcīnās modifies nātiōnēs; urbī Rōmae is dative with vīcīnās (A&G §384).

eārum – The antecedent is nātiōnēs.

12. Commōtis bellis – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). Commōtīs – perfect passive participle of commoveō, -ēre.

Caenīnēnsēs vīcit, Antemnātēs, Crustumīnōs, Sabīnōs, Fīdēnātēs, Veientēs – Caenina, Antemnae, and Crustumerium were communities absorbed by Rome early in her history. Veii was Rome's nearest Etruscan neighbor, and Fidenae, five miles north of Rome on the Tiber, was Veii's stronghold (see Appendix A: Maps). These cities were to become vexing enemies to Rome in the fifth century BCE (see Chapters XVI, XIX, and XX). The tradition that Rome was engaged in conflict with Veii and Fidenae during the eighth century is not historical and perhaps arose to establish a precedent from the reign of Romulus for the later, historical struggles.

Caenīnēnsēs . . . Antemnātēs, Crustumīnōs, Sabīnōs, Fīdēnātēs, Veientēs – objects of vīcit. vīcit – perfect of vincō, -ere.

13. Haec omnia oppida urbem cingunt – Haec omnia oppida is the subject and urbem the direct object of cingunt.

15. cum . . . nōn compāruisset – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFN 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). Render cum into English here as when. Compāruisset is the pluperfect subjunctive of compāreō, -ēre; translate here with the corresponding indicative (he had not appeared).

ortā . . . tempestāte – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFN 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419); ortā is the perfect participle of the deponent verb orior, -īrī.

annō . . . trīcēsīmō septīmō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFN 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423). rēgnī – genitive singular.

16. ad deōs trānsisse crēditus est – The tradition about the death of Romulus is contradictory. The Roman historian Livy records the suspicion that he was murdered by the senators.

trānsisse – perfect infinitive of trānseō, -īre.

crēditus est – perfect passive of crēdō, -ere.

cōnsecrātus [est] – perfect passive of cōnsecrō, -āre.

Deinde Rōmae per quīnōs diēs senātōrēs imperāvērunt – The tenure of power between the reigns of kings is called an interregnum. This institution was retained in the Republic and used at the death or resignation of both consuls.

Rōmae – locative (W 314, ER 349, LFA 178, LFNM 26–28, CLC 327, A&G §427): at Rome.

per quīnōs diēs – accusative of duration of time (per is sometimes used for emphasis) (W 314, LFNM 495, CLC 149, A&G §424a). quīnōs – distributive numeral, five each, five apiece, etc. (W 130, LFNM 497, A&G §136–37).

17. hīs rēgnantibus – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419).

complētus est – perfect passive of compleō, -ēre.

Chapter III

19. Numa Pompilius – The name Numa Pompilius may be of Sabine origin, further evidence of an early Sabine influence at Rome. Numa is the priestly counterpart to Romulus: while Romulus is the archetype of the warrior-king, Numa is the archetype of the priest-king. The religious innovations that the Roman tradition attributes to Numa, however, actually belong to a later, Etruscan period.

creātus est – perfect passive of creō, -āre.

quidem – Note that this is quidem (indeed), not quīdam (a certain).

20. gessit – perfect of gerō, -ere.

cīvitātī – dative with a compound verb, prōfuit (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, CLC 325, A&G §370).

prōfuit – perfect of prōsum, -desse.

et . . . cōstituit . . . et . . . dēscrīpsit . . . et . . . cōstituit – Note that the three main clauses are each introduced by the conjunction et.

21. Rōmānīs – dative of indirect object.

quī – The antecedent is Rōmānīs.

cōsuētūdine – ablative of cause (W 493, ER 346, LFA 499, LFNM 495, A&G §404). This construction is sometimes difficult to distinguish from the ablative of means or instrument (W 116–17, ER 346, LFA 20, LFNM 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409).

latrōnēs ac sēmibarbarī – predicate nominative (W 34, ER 341, LFNM 473, CLC 324, A&G §283).

22. putābantur – inceptive imperfect (A&G §471c): began to be thought.

annum dēscrīpsit in decem mēnsēs – Both the Roman historian Livy and the Greek historian Plutarch say that Numa fixed the calendar at twelve months, not ten, as Eutropius claims. According to this tradition, Numa added January and February to the earlier, ten-month calendar (which may have had an uncounted gap in the winter). The change to a twelve-month calendar, however, more likely belongs to the Etruscan period, a century later.

23. cōnfūsum – perfect passive participle of cōfundō, -ere; modifies annum.

Rōmae – locative (W 314, ER 349, LFA 178, LFNM 26–28, CLC 327, A&G §427): at Rome.

sacra – plural substantive (W 35, ER 349, LFNM 475, A&G §288) from sacer, sacra, sacrum. Render into English as sacred rites, observances, or ceremonies.

24. Morbō – ablative of cause (W 493, ER 346, LFA 499, LFNM 495, A&G §404).

dēcessit – perfect of dēcēdō, -ere.

quadrāgēsīmō et tertiō . . . annō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFNM 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423).

Chapter IV

25. Huic – dative with a compound verb (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, CLC 325, A&G §370). Translate as if this were the direct object of successit.

successit – perfect of succēdō, -ere.

Tullus Hostilius – While Tullus Hostilius's reign is characterized primarily by legendary military exploits, his name is most likely that of a historical person: Tullus is an authentic Latin or Volscian praenomen, and the name Hostilius was associated with the original senate house, the Curia Hostilia, long before the gens Hostilia came into prominence. The fact that the Hostilii were a plebeian family also makes it less likely that the name is a later invention. The tradition of Tullus's military exploits may have arisen to explain the gens name (which means hostile) and to emphasize the contrast between him and his priestly predecessor, Numa.

Hic bella reparāvit . . . urbem ampliāvit, adiectō Caeliō monte – Hic governs four verbs, each with a direct object: bella reparāvit; Albānōs vīcit; Vēientēs et Fīdēnātēs superāvit; urbem ampliāvit. The English word order would be Hic reparāvit bella, vīcit Albānōs (quī sunt duodecimō mīliārīō ab urbe Rōmā), superāvit bellō Vēientēs et Fīdēnātēs (aliī quōrum absunt ab urbe Rōmā sextō mīliārīō, aliī octāvō decimō), ampliāvit urbem, Caeliō monte adiectō.

Albānōs vīcit – Alba Longa was the ancient Latin city said to have been founded by Aeneas’s son Ascanius. It was the early leader of a confederation of Latin cities (see note on Contrā Latīnōs dīmīcāvit, line 31). The capture of Alba by Rome in the seventh century BCE is probably historical.

26. duodecimō miliārīō – ablative of place where (W 177, ER 344, LFA 7, LFNM 477, CLC 326–27, A&G §426): at the twelfth mile marker. The preposition in is often omitted when an adjective modifies the noun (LFA 7, A&G §429.2). The same construction is used at lines 27, 32, 52, 122, 138, and 147.

miliārīō – Milestones were set up at intervals of one thousand paces (milia passuum). This was equivalent to 4,854 feet, slightly shorter than the modern mile. Throughout Book I, Eutropius provides distances from Rome for many of the places he mentions. This information does not come from his principal source, an Epitome of Livy.

27. bellō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, CLC 326–27, A&G §423). Many expressions use the construction time when where in English the main idea is place (A&G §424d).
28. adiectō Caeliō monte – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). For the location of the seven hills of Rome, see Appendix A: Maps. adiectō – perfect passive participle of adiciō, -ere.

Cum . . . rēgnāssēt – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). Render cum into English here as when. rēgnāssēt – contracted form of the pluperfect subjunctive: the -v- ending of a perfect stem is often dropped before -i- or -ā- (rēgnāvisset → rēgnāssēt) (A&G §181). As often, translate the subjunctive in the cum clause as the corresponding indicative (had ruled).

trīgintā et duōs annōs – accusative of duration of time (W 314, ER 345, LFA 97, LFNM 495, CLC 149, A&G §423).

29. fulmine ictus cum domō suā ārsit – The perfect passive participle (ictus) indicates an action that has been completed before that of the main verb (ārsit). The participle can be translated as a subordinate clause (after he had been struck by lightning), or the entire sentence can be rendered into English as two coordinate clauses (he was struck by lightning and burned together, etc.). fulmine – ablative of means or instrument (W 116–17, ER 346, LFA 20, LFNM 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409). ictus – perfect passive participle of icō, -ere. ārsit – perfect of ārdeō, -ēre.

Chapter V

30. Ancus Mārcius – Like that of his predecessor, Ancus Marcius's name comes from a plebeian gens that rose to prominence long after the reign of the seven kings would have been established in the tradition. His name, therefore, is also probably that of a real person and not a later interpolation.

suscēpit – perfect active of suscipiō, -ere.

31. Contrā Latīnōs dīmīcāvit – The Latins were the inhabitants of the plain of Latium (modern-day Lazio), who shared a common language and common religious practices. Their numerous villages and cities formed confederations, which later historians came to know as the Latin League. The leadership of the league had passed early on from Alba to Rome (see chapter IV). During the later Regal period and the early Republic, Rome and the Latin League variously established treaty relationships and engaged in conflicts. This culminated with the defeat and abolition of the league by Rome in 338 BCE. For more information, see the entry for Latini in the Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd Edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1996).

Aventīnum montem cīvitatī adiēcit et lāniculum – Aventīnum montem and lāniculum are the direct objects of adiēcit, cīvitatī the dative of indirect object. adiēcit – perfect active of adiciō, -ere. For the locations of the hills of Rome, see Appendix A: Maps.

32. apud ōstium Tiberis cīvitatē . . . condidit – According to tradition, Ostia, Rome’s principal port city, was founded during the reign of Ancus Marcius (642–616 BCE). There is no archeological evidence of settlements there, however, until well into the Republic. See Appendix A: Maps.

cīvitatē – direct object of condidit. For cīvītās as a synonym of urbs, see note on cīvitatē, line 7.

Chapter VI

34. Deinde rēgnū Prīscus Tarquinius accēpit – According to tradition, Tarquinius Priscus was the first Etruscan king of Rome. The Etruscans were Rome’s powerful neighbors to the north who inhabited the area roughly equivalent to modern-day Tuscany. Since Rome was one of the northernmost Latin cities (see Appendix A: Maps), Etruria exerted a more powerful influence on it than on many of the other Latin cities. The historian H. H. Scullard writes that “the Romans borrowed much, but they remained essentially Latin, in race, language, institutions, and religion. But their relations with the Latins were gradually altered, for the Etruscans had reorientated the city. Previously it had been a northern outpost of the Latins against Etruria; it became a southern outpost of Etruria against the Latins. The spear-head was turned from north to south”

numerus senātorum duplicāvit – There is no consensus among the Roman historians about how or when the senate was increased from its original one hundred members. Most agree that Tarquinius Priscus increased the number of senators by one hundred (by admitting the gentes minores—families that, for an unknown reason, were less prominent than those from the original senatorial families, the gentes maiores). By all accounts the number of senators had reached three hundred by the early Republic.

35. circum Rōmae aedificāvit – A circus was an enclosure for chariot racing. The oldest circus at Rome was the Circus Maximus, between the Palatine and Aventine Hills. Tradition assigns its construction to Tarquinius Priscus. By republican times the Circus Maximus was the largest structure at Rome, accommodating approximately 150,000 spectators.

lūdōs Rōmānōs – The Lūdī Rōmānī were among the oldest and most important games celebrated at Rome. Dedicated to Jupiter Optimus Maximus, they were a combination of religious festivals, chariot racing, and public parades. According to tradition, they were introduced during the reign of Tarquinius Priscus. While they do seem to be of Etruscan origin, their regular observance probably dates to the Republic.

35. Rōmae – locative (W 314, ER 349, LFA 178, LFNM 26–28, CLC 327, A&G §427): at Rome.

36. Vicit idem etiam Sabīnōs – The Sabine villages were mainly north-east of Rome, along the Apennine Mountains. See Appendix A: Maps.

idem – Īdem, eadem, idem is often used to introduce further information about a subject or object; translate as furthermore, also, at the same time (see also nōbilissimam fēminam Lucretiam eandemque pudicissimam, line 52).

nōn parum agrōrum sublātum īsdem urbis Rōmae territōriō iūnxit – Nōn parum agrōrum is the object of iūnxit and is modified by the participle sublātum. This participle can be rendered into English as a relative clause (which had been taken), or the entire sentence can be translated into coordinate clauses (he took a large amount of land, etc., and added it . . .). Compare to fulmine ictus cum domō suā ārsit, line 29. The English word order would be iūnxit territōriō urbis Rōmae nōn parum agrōrum sublātum īsdem. nōn parum – not a small amount = large amount. The expression of an idea by negating its opposite is called litotes. agrōrum – partitive genitive (W 124, ER 342, LFA 25, CLC 324, A&G §346). īsdem – alternate form of eīsdem; the construction is ablative of separation with the participle sublātum (W 163, ER 348, LFA 214, CLC 326–27, A&G §400): taken from the same people. urbis Rōmae – genitives modifying territōriō. territōriō – dative of indirect object with iūnxit: added to the territory.

37. triumphāns urbem intrāvit – A successful Roman general would make a triumphal procession—which in republican times proceeded along the Via Sacra to the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus—upon his return from a campaign. The ceremony had Etruscan origins, as the tradition suggests.

38. Mūrōs fēcit et cloācās, Capitōlium inchoāvit – The Capitoline was the hill on which Tarquinius Priscus was said to have begun the great temple to Jupiter Optimus Maximus. The building of the cloacae—to drain the valley between the Palatine and Capitoline Hills—was, in fact, a prerequisite for the construction projects on the Capitoline.

39. per Ancī filiōs – The personal agent is often expressed by per with the accusative (LFA 33, A&G §405b).

occīsus est – perfect passive of occīdō, -ere.

rēgis eius – in apposition to Ancī (W 19, LFA 8, A&G §282).

cuī – dative with a compound verb (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, CLC 325, A&G §370). Translate as if it were the direct object of successerat.

Chapter VII

41. Post hunc Servius Tullius suscēpit imperium – The name of the sixth king of Rome is Latin, not Etruscan, perhaps signaling an interruption in Etruscan rule. Servius is also credited with building a temple to Diana—a Latin, rather than Etruscan, goddess—on the Aventine. The historicity of Servius Tullius, considered certain by most historians, is again supported by his plebeian name.

genitus ex nōbili fēminā, captivā tamen et ancillā – According to tradition, Servius's mother was a Latin noblewoman taken captive in war and given to the wife of Tarquinius Priscus.

genitus – perfect passive participle of gignō, -ere.

42. captivā . . . et ancillā – modifies fēminā.

subēgit – perfect of subagō, -ere.

montēs trēs, Quirīnālem, Viminālem, Ēsquilinūm, urbī adiūnxit – Servius is said to have expanded the pomerium, the sacred boundary of the city, to include the Quirinal, Viminal, and (part of) the Esquiline hills. This does not correspond to the so-called Servian Walls, which were actually constructed in the fourth century BCE. See Appendix A: Maps.

43. Quirīnālem, Viminālem, Ēsquīlīnum – in apposition to montēs trēs (W 25, LFA 8, A&G §282).

fossās circum mūrum dūxit – Eutropius’s description of Servius having made fossae (ditches) around the city is probably more historical than the stone walls traditionally attributed to this king. The fossae would also have consisted of aggeres (protective earthen ramparts).

44. Prīmus omnium cēsum ōrdināvit – According to tradition, Servius carried out the census in order to classify the citizen body within the new political assembly, the Comitia Centuriata. While many modern scholars accept that Servius implemented some version of constitutional reform whereby the citizen body was divided by capacity to arm oneself, the complex system of graded property classes on which the later Comitia Centuriata was based probably does not belong to the Regal period. For more information, see the entry for Comitia in the Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd Edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1996).

quī adhūc per orbem terrārum incognitus erat – There were censuses in the Greek world that predated the reign of Servius Tullius. Perhaps Eutropius is pointing out that Servius’s reforms were supposed to have taken place before the reforms of Cleisthenes at Athens.

45. incognitus erat – This is an adjective with the imperfect of sum, esse, not a pluperfect passive verbal form.

Rōma . . . habuit capita LXXXIII milia – Rōma is the subject and capita LXXXIII the direct object of habuit.

omnibus in cēsum dēlātis – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). dēlātis – perfect passive participle of dēferō, -ferre.

46. capita LXXXIII mīlia cīvium Rōmānōrum – This number would include all male citizens; it is close to those given by both Livy and Dionysius of Halicarnassus. The number may, however, be too high for the Regal period.

cīvium Rōmānōrum – genitive modifying capita.

47. Occīsus est – perfect passive of occīdō, -ere.

scelere – ablative of means or instrument (W 116–17, ER 346, LFA 20, LFNM 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409).

generī suī Tarquinīi Superbī – genitives modifying scelere.

filii eius rēgis – in apposition to generī (W 25, LFA 8, A&G §282).

cuī – dative with a compound verb (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, CLC 325, A&G §370). Translate as if it were the direct object of successerat.

Occīsus est scelere generī suī Tarquinīi Superbī – Beginning with his treacherous accession to power, Tarquinius Superbus is portrayed as a Greek tyrant. The Greek historian Polybius, writing about the Roman constitution, drew an explicit comparison between Tarquinius Superbus and the tyrants of the Archaic Greek city-states: “Such is the cycle of political revolution, the course appointed by nature in which constitutions change. . . . The kingship changed into a tyranny; the first steps towards its overthrow were taken by the subjects, and conspiracies began to be formed” (Histories VI.7, translated by W. R. Paton).

Chapter VIII

49. L. Tarquinius Superbus, septimus atque ultimus rēgum – The narrative of the two Tarquins contains a good deal of duplication: they are said to have undertaken some of the same building projects, conquered some of the same peoples, and so forth. The historian R. M. Ogilvie says, “Their very names, Priscus [ancient] and Superbus [proud], are the work of subsequent differentiation. . . . We should rather believe that tradition accurately preserved the memory of an Etruscan era at Rome lasting for a century with possible interruptions (Servius Tullius) during which the Tarquin family maintained a dynastic rule, but that the few specific events which were remembered, such as . . . the tragedy of Lucretia, were remembered as occurring in the times of the Tarquins rather than as attached to one particular person” (Commentary on Livy, Books 1–5 [New York: Oxford University Press, 1965], p. 145).

L. – Roman praenomina were almost always written in abbreviated form, except when they appeared alone. Lucius is one of several Roman praenomina of Etruscan origin.

Volscōs, quae gēns ad Campāniam euntibus nōn longē ab urbe est, vīcit – The Volsci were a people who inhabited southern Latium. During the early Republic, they were to become one of Rome’s principal threats in Latium. See Appendix A: Maps.

Volscōs – object of vīcit.

50. ad Campāniam euntibus – Euntibus is the dative of the present participle of eō, īre. Ad . . . euntibus and ab . . . venientibus are often used to show relative location: as one goes to and as one comes from (A&G §378.2).

Gabiōs – in apposition to cīvitātem.

51. cum Tuscīs pācem fēcīt – The fact that Rome may have been at war with Etruscan cities (such as Veii) is not contradicted by Etruscan rule at Rome. Etruscan cities were often at war with one another.

52. Posteā, Ardeam oppugnāns . . . imperium perdidit – The English word order would be Posteā, oppugnāns Ardeam, cīvitātem positam in octāvō decimō mīliārīō ab urbe Rōmā, perdidit imperium.

54. cum . . . stuprāsset – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). stuprāsset – contracted form of the pluperfect subjunctive (A&G §181). See note on rēgnāsset, line 29.

Tarquinius iūnior – According to most Roman historical accounts, Sextus Tarquinius was the youngest son of Tarquinius Superbus.

nōbilissimam fēminam Lucrētiam – The story of the rape of Lucretia is deeply established in the Roman tradition, and it is assumed that Lucretia was a historical person (though it is impossible to determine what role she may have actually played in the downfall of the monarchy). The story has many antecedents in Greek literature, and it is one of the key episodes that characterize the reign of Tarquinius Superbus as a tyrannical one.

55. eandemque – Īdem, eadem, idem is often used to introduce further information about a subject or object; translate as furthermore, also, at the same time (see also Vicit īdem etiam Sabīnōs, line 36).

Collātīnī – The historicity of Lucius Tarquinius Collatinus, the husband of Lucretia and one of the first two consuls, is dubious.

56. marītō et patrī et amīcīs – datives of indirect object.

questa fuisset – pluperfect subjunctive of the deponent verb queror, querī; the auxiliaries fuissem, fuiſsēs, etc., are sometimes used for essem, essēs, etc., in the formation of the pluperfect passive (A&G §184, note).

57. Propter quam causam – The relative quī, quae, quod often stands at the beginning of a sentence, serving to connect it with the preceding one (LFA 204, CLC 309, A&G §308f). Translate into English as this: [and] on account of this reason.

Brūtus, parēns et ipse Tarquiniū – According to tradition, Lucius Junius Brutus was the grandson of Tarquinius Priscus. Both his gens and his family name, however, are Latin, not Etruscan. The tradition that he feigned madness to escape persecution by the king arose to explain his family name, Brutus (which means stupid). There is little doubt that Brutus was a historical person or that he was involved in the establishment of the Republic. His descendant was Marcus Junius Brutus the tyrannicide, one of the principal leaders of the conspiracy against Julius Caesar in 44 BCE.

parēns – Parēns meaning relative is a late usage (in classical Latin, parēns means parent). Notice that the word for relative in many Romance languages come from this late usage: parente, pariente, parent.

58. Tarquiniō – dative of separation (W 291, ER 343, CLC 325, A&G §381). Some compound verbs meaning to take away govern the dative of separation.

eum – The antecedent is Tarquinius.

59. quī – The antecedent is exercitus.

60. portis clausis – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419).

exclūsus est – perfect passive of exclūdō, -ere.

cumque imperāset – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). imperāset – contracted form of the pluperfect subjunctive (A&G §181). See note on rēgnāset, line 29.

annōs quattuor et vīgintī – accusative of duration of time (W 314, ER 345, LFA 97, LFNM 495, CLC 149, A&G §423).

61. liberīs – This is the noun liberī, -ōrum, children, not the adjective liber, -era, -um, free.

rēgnātum est – perfect passive of rēgnō, -āre. The passive forms of intransitive verbs are often used impersonally (LFNM 503, A&G §208d).

per septem rēgēs – The personal agent is often expressed by per with the accusative (LFA 33, A&G §405b).

62. annīs ducentīs quadrāgintā tribus – Occasionally, the ablative is used to express duration of time (A&G §424b).

cum . . . possidēret – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 73, A&G §546). possidēret – imperfect subjunctive of possidēō, -ēre.

Chapter IX

64. Hinc cōsulēs coepēre, prō ūnō rēge duo – According to the Roman tradition, the monarchy was immediately replaced by dual supreme magistrates (probably originally called praetors, not consuls). This is accepted by many, though not all, modern historians. The consuls were the highest civil authority of the Republic and also the supreme commanders of the army. They gave their names to the years in which they served (e.g., C. Fabiō et L. Virgīniō cōsulibus, in the consulships of Gaius Fabius and Lucius Virginius). For more information, see the entry for Consul in the Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd Edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1996).

coepēre – The ending -ēre is often used instead of -ērunt for the third-person plural perfect active indicative. Coepī, -isse is a defective verb with only perfect tenses (incipiō fills in for the present, imperfect, and future tenses) (A&G §205).

ut . . . alter eum . . . coercēret – purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFNM 40–41, CLC 110, A&G §531.1).

sī ūnus malus esse voluisset – The pluperfect subjunctive is used in this if clause because the clause is in a subordinate construction (a purpose clause after ut). It is used to show that an action has been completed before the time of the then clause. Had the condition not been in a subordinate construction, the if clause here would have been either future perfect indicative or perfect subjunctive (A&G §516 2c).

66. placuit – Placeō, -ēre is often used impersonally (especially in historic tenses) to indicate resolutions of the senate. It may be followed by an infinitive or by ut or nē plus the subjunctive (as here). The same meaning is used at line 71.

nē imperium . . . habērent and sed cīvīlēs semper essent – jussive noun clauses (indirect command) (W 253, ER 364, LFA 135, LFNM 98, CLC 221, A&G §563).

nē . . . insolentiōrēs redderentur – purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFNM 40–41, CLC 221, A&G §531.1). insolentiōrēs – predicate nominative (W 34, ER 341, LFNM 473, CLC 324, A&G §283).

67. quī sē . . . scīrent – relative clause of characteristic (W 323–24, LFA 504, LFNM 508, A&G §535).

68. sē . . . futūrōs esse – indirect statement (W 202–4, ER 366, LFA 117, A&G §577–84) after scīrent; sē is the accusative subject; futūrōs esse is the future infinitive of sum, esse: render into English as either that they were going to be or that they would be.

prīvātōs – predicate accusative (A&G §392) with sē.

Fuērunt igitur, annō prīmō . . . marītus Lucretīae – The English word order would be Annō prīmō igitur expulsīs rēgibus cōsulēs fuērunt L. Iūnius Brūtus, quī maximē ēgerat ut Tarquinius pellerētur, et Tarquinius Collātīnus, marītus Lucretīae.

annō prīmō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFNM 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423).

69. expulsīs rēgibus – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419).

ēgerat – pluperfect indicative of agō, -ere.

ut Tarquinius pellerētur – purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFNM 40–41, CLC 110, A&G §531.1). The imperfect subjunctive may be rendered here with the English auxiliary might: that Tarquinius might be expelled. More natural English would use the active voice and an infinitive: to expel Tarquinius.

70. Tarquiniō – dative of separation (W 291, ER 343, CLC 325, A&G §381). Some compound verbs meaning to take away govern the dative of separation.

71. sublāta est – perfect passive of sufferō, -ferre; dignitās is the subject.

dignitās – Like honor, dignitās is often used to mean a position conferring rank or a high political office.

nē quisquam in urbe remanēret – jussive noun clauses (indirect command) (W 303–4, ER 364, LFA 135, LFNM 98, CLC 221, A&G §563): that no one should remain in the city. Nē quisquam is a more emphatic expression of nē quis.

72. quī Tarquinius vocārētur – relative clause of characteristic (W 323–24, LFA 504, LFNM 508, A&G §535). Translate here with an English indicative, who were called, rather than using the auxiliary would.

acceptō omnī patrimōniō suō – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). acceptō – perfect passive participle of accipiō, -ere.

73. locō ipsiūs factus est L. Valerius Pūblicola cōsul – Livy gives the praenomen of Valerius Publicola as Publius, not Lucius. He also mentions a popular etymology that derives the family name Pūblicola from populus + colō (favorer or friend of the people) because of Valerius Publicola's efforts on behalf of the plebeian citizen body. These efforts included the enactment of the Valerian Law, which granted the right of appeal to all citizens. For the division of the Roman citizen body into two classes, patrician and plebeian, see chapter XIII.

factus est – perfect passive of faciō, -ere; Valerius Publicola is the subject, cōnsul the predicate nominative (W 34, ER 341, LFN 473, CLC 324, A&G §283).

74. urbī Rōmae – dative with a compound verb (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, CLC 325, A&G §370).

rēx Tarquinius – here, Tarquinius Superbus.

fuerat expulsus – pluperfect passive indicative of expellō, -ere; the auxiliaries fuissem, fuissēs, etc., are sometimes used for essem, essēs, etc., in the formation of the pluperfect passive (A&G §184, note).

75. ut in rēgnum posset restitui – purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFN 40–41, CLC 110, A&G §531.1). Translate either with the English auxiliary might (in order that he might be able to be restored) or with an English infinitive (to be able to be restored). restitui – present passive infinitive of restituō, -ere.

Chapter X

77. Brūtum mātṛōnae Rōmānae . . . lūxērunt – The English word order would be Rōmānae mātṛōnae lūxērunt Brūtum (dēfēnsōrem suae pudicitiae) per annum, quasi commūnem patrem.

78. dēfēnsōrem – in apposition to Brūtum.

79. lūxērunt – perfect of lūgeō, -ēre.

Sp. Lucretium Tricipitinum – Like Lucretia's husband Collatinus, her father Spurius Lucretius Tricipitinus is of doubtful historicity.

80. quō . . . mortuō – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFN 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419): and with this man having died. The relative quī, quae, quod often stands at the beginning of a sentence or clause, serving to connect it with the preceding one (LFA 204, CLC 218, A&G §308f).

morbō – ablative of cause (W 493, ER 346, LFA 499, LFN 495, A&G §404): by natural causes.

Horātium Pulvillum – Marcus Horatius Pulvillus is credited with dedicating the temple to Jupiter Optimus Maximus, which had been built during the reign of the Tarquins (see chapters VI and VIII). His historicity is likely.

81. collēgam – predicate accusative (ER 366, A&G §392–93).

prīmus annus quīnque cōsulēs habuit – The tradition that the first year of the Republic had five consuls probably arose to accommodate the several figures—some historical, some later inventions—that had come to be associated with the establishment of the Republic.

prīmus annus quīnque cōsulēs habuit – Prīmus annus is the subject of habuit; quīnque cōsulēs is the direct object.

82. cum . . . cessisset . . . perīssset . . . mortuus esset – cum clauses (causal) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 265, A&G §549). Render cum here as since.

urbe – ablative of separation (W 163, ER 348, LFA 214, CLC 326–27, A&G §400).

83. perīssset – contracted pluperfect form of periisset; -ii before -s is regularly contracted to -ī (A&G §203).

mortuus esset – pluperfect subjunctive of the deponent verb morior, morī.

Chapter XI

84. Secundō quoque annō . . . Rōmam paene cēpit – The English word order would be Secundō annō quoque Tarquinius iterum intulit bellum Rōmānīs ut reciperētur in rēgnum, Porsennā rēge Tusciae ferente auxilium eī, et paene cēpit Rōmam.

Secundō . . . annō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFNM 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423).

ut reciperetur in rēgnū – purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFNM 40–41, CLC 110, A&G §531.1).

85. bellum Rōmānīs intulit – Bellum is the object of intulit, Rōmānīs the dative of indirect object.

auxilium eī ferente Porsennā – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). ferente – present active participle of ferō, ferre. Notice that the active form of the participle can be used to form an ablative absolute; here auxilium is the object of the participle: with Porsenna offering him help.

rēge – in apposition to Porsennā.

Porsennā – Lars Porsenna, the king of the Etruscan city Clusium, besieged Rome during the very early Republic. Eutropius follows the main Roman tradition, in which Porsenna called off the siege, an attempt to reinstate Tarquinius Superbus, after witnessing the bravery of Roman citizens like Gaius Mucius (see the boxed text Romanus sum civis, page 18). More likely is the alternate tradition in which Porsenna captured Rome and imposed harsh peace terms. The fact that he did not then reinstate Tarquinius suggests that Porsenna was not fighting on his behalf.

86. victus est – perfect passive of vincō, -ere.

Tertiō annō post rēgēs exāctōs – Through chapter XV of Book I, Eutropius uses the expression since the expulsion of the kings to give the date. In chapter XVIII he switches to the more widely used formulation from the founding of the city. Tertiō annō – ablative of time when (no preposition is used) (W 125, ER 346, LFA 7, LFNM 496, CLC 326–27, A&G §423). exāctōs – perfect passive participle of exigō, -ere.

87. cum suscipī nōn posset . . . neque eī Porsenna . . . praestāret auxilium – cum clauses (causal) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 265, A&G §549). Render cum here as since. suscipī – present passive infinitive of suscipio, -ere.

88. fēcerat – pluperfect of faciō, -ere.

Tusculum – Tusculum was an important city in Latium, approximately fifteen miles southeast of Rome. Its tyrant, Tarquinius Superbus's father-in-law, was said to have supported Tarquinius in his attempt to regain the throne.

Tusculum sē contulit, quae cīvitās nōn longē ab urbe est – The noun cīvitās, which describes Tusculum, logically belongs outside the relative clause: Tusculum sē contulit, cīvitātem quae nōn longē ab urbe est. However, the antecedent of a relative pronoun—especially an appositive—is often incorporated into the relative clause (A&G §307e).

Tusculum – accusative of place to which: no preposition is used with the names of cities (W 314, ER 345, LFA 204, LFNM 478, CLC 325, A&G §427).

90. cōsensuit – perfect of cōnsenesco, -ere.

91. cum Sabīnī Rōmānīs bellum intulissent – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). Sabīnī is the subject and bellum the direct object of intulissent; Rōmānīs is the dative of indirect object. intulissent – perfect of inferō, -ferre.

Sabīnī . . . victī sunt et dē hīs triumphātum – This victory is recorded in the Fasti Triumphales (Records of triumphs). The Sabines, who had not been in conflict with Rome for some time, may have been taking advantage of its weakened position due to its recent conflict with Porsenna.

92. victī sunt – perfect passive of vincō, -ere.

triumphātum est – perfect passive of triumphō, -āre. The passive forms of intransitive verbs are often used impersonally (LFNM 503, A&G §208d).

L. Valerius ille – Ille following a noun often means the famous (A&G §297b).

93. collēga – in apposition to L. Valerius.

mortuus est – perfect of the deponent verb morior, morī.

ut . . . sūmptum habuerit sepultūrae – result clause (W 237–38, ER 362, LFA 92, LFNM 319–20, CLC 130, A&G §537.1). A result clause can often be identified by the presence of an adverb indicating degree, such as adeō, in the main clause: “He did something to such an extent that he . . .” An imperfect subjunctive (e.g., habēret) is normally used to denote action at the same time as that of the historical main verb; the perfect subjunctive (habuerit) is used here to emphasize that it is a simple past-tense action (A&G §485c).

collātis ā populō nummīs – The people paid for the burial of Valerius Publicola because he had been their champion. See note on locō ipsius factus est L. Valerius Pūblicola cōsul, line 73.

94. Quem – The relative quī, quae, quod often stands at the beginning of a sentence or clause, serving to connect it with the preceding one (LFA 204, CLC 309, A&G §308f). Translate into English here as and him.

Chapter XII

96. cum gener Tarquinii . . . ingentem collēgisset exercitum – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 260–61, CLC 70, A&G §546). collēgisset – pluperfect subjunctive of colligō, -ere.

ad iniūriam socerī vindicandam – The gerundive with ad or causā is often used to express purpose (W 334, LFA 142, A&G §506). It is best to take the entire gerundive phrase into account and render it into idiomatic English: for avenging the wrong done to his father-in-law (using an English gerund) or to avenge the wrong done to his father-in-law (using an English infinitive). An overly literal translation of the gerundive would be for [the purpose of] the wrong done to his father-in-law to be avenged.

socerī – objective genitive (W 492, A&G §347–48).

97. Rōmae – locative (W 314, ER 349, LFA 178, LFNM 26–28, CLC 327, A&G §427): at Rome.

98. quae dictātūra appellātur, maior quam cōsulātus – The dictatorship was an extraordinary political office employed during military or political crises. The dictator held undivided military authority—not subject to veto or appeal—for six months. The title may have originally been magister populi. The origins of this office are obscure, though as the tradition suggests, it does seem to be a republican institution, not a temporary reversion to monarchy, since the office existed in other Latin cities.

Eōdem annō etiam magister equitum factus est – The magister equitum was the dictator's second-in-command. He was nominated by the dictator upon the latter's appointment to office. As the title suggests, the magister equitum may have originally been in command of the cavalry.

99. equitum – genitive plural of eques, equitis.

quī dictātōrī obsequerētur – purpose clause introduced by the relative pronoun (W 328, LFNM 509, CLC 179, A&G §531.2). Like ut-purpose clauses, this may be rendered into English with the infinitive: to be subordinate to the dictator. dictātōrī – dative with the compound verb obsequerētur (W 296, ER 343, LFA 173, LFNM 509, CLC 325, A&G §370).

100. Rōmae – locative (W 314, ER 349, LFA 178, LFNM 26–28, CLC 327, A&G §427): at Rome (also in line 101).

Chapter XIII

101. sēditionem populus Rōmae fēcit – The Roman citizen body was divided into two classes: plebeians and patricians. The political history of the early Republic was dominated by the so-called conflict of the orders, in which the plebeians attempted to strengthen their political, social, and economic position. According to tradition, in 494 BCE the plebeians seceded to a hill near Rome, the Mons Sacra, and formed a virtual state within a state.

102. fēcit – perfect of faciō, -ere.

tamquam . . . premerētur – Tamquam regularly governs the subjunctive, meaning as if (A&G §540.2). As here, it sometimes introduces a circumstance alleged to be the ground on which an act is based; translate as on the grounds that. See tamquam in the Oxford Latin Dictionary (New York: Oxford University Press, 1982).

ipse – the antecedent is populus.

ipse sibi tribūnōs plēbis quasi propriōs iūdicēs et dēfēnsōrēs creāvit – During their secession, the plebeians established their own assemblies and officers. In the agreement by which they returned, the senate recognized the newly created tribunes as the representatives of the plebeian order. The tribunes exercised veto power over laws, elections, and acts of magistrates, elicited resolutions (plebiscita), and summoned the plebs to assembly (comitia plebis tributa). For more information, see the entry for Plebs in the Oxford Classical Dictionary, 3rd Edition (New York: Oxford University Press, 1996).

103. per quōs . . . tūtus esse posset – purpose clause introduced by the relative pronoun (W 328, LFNM 509, CLC 179, A&G §531.2): through whom they might be able to be safe.

Chapter XIV

105. Sequentī – present active participle of sequor, sequī.

Volscī contrā Rōmānōs bellum reparāvērunt – The Volsci were one of Rome's principal threats in the region. The tradition that the Romans and the Volsci had been in conflict since the late Regal period is probably correct (see chapter VIII). The Roman general Coriolanus is credited with having captured the Volscian city Corioli.

106. Coriolōs – The names of some cities are plural, such as Bāiae, Coriolōs, Fidēnae, Pompēiī, and Veīī.

Chapter XV

107. ēiectī erant – pluperfect passive indicative of ēiciō, -ere.

expulsus ex urbe . . . auxilia contrā Rōmānōs accēpit – The English word order would be Q. Mārcius—dux Rōmānus quī cēperat Coriolōs, cīvitātem Volscōrum—expulsus ex urbe, irātus contendit ad Volscōs ipsōs et accēpit auxilia contrā Rōmānōs. expulsus – perfect passive participle of expellō, -ere.

108. Q. Mārcius – Livy gives Marcius Coriolanus's praenomen as Gnaeus, not Quintus. According to the Roman tradition, he received the agnomen Coriolanus after his victory over the Volsci at Corioli (see chapter XIV). In the original myth, however, Coriolanus may have been a Volscian—the eponymous founder of Corioli, not its captor. He was said to have been expelled from Rome later for opposing grain distribution to the starving plebeians. Shakespeare made him the protagonist of the play The Tragedy of Coriolanus.

109. accēpit – perfect of accipiō, -ere; the subject is Q. Mārcius, the object auxilia.

110. vīcit – perfect of vincō, -ere.

accessit – perfect of accēdō, -ere.

oppugnātūrus etiam patriam suam – A future participle may sometimes stand for the then clause (apodosis) of a condition (A&G §498.3): ready to attack . . . if his mother had not come. The usual formation of this past contrary-to-fact condition would have been oppugnāvisset . . . nisi māter Veturia vēnissent: he would have attacked . . . if his mother Veturia had not come (A&G §517).

111. lēgātis . . . repudiātis – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419).

113. remōvit exercitum – According to Livy, the Volsci executed Coriolanus for calling off the siege.

114. quī dux . . . esset – relative clause of characteristic (W 323, LFA 504, LFNM 508, A&G §535): who would be a military commander.

Chapter XVI

115. C. Fabiō [Vibulanō] et L. Virgīniō [Tricostō Rutilō] cōsulibus – Livy gives the praenomina of these two consuls as Caeso and Titus, respectively. Identifying the consuls for a specific year is one of the regular methods for giving the date. The construction is ablative absolute. Since classical Latin lacks the present participle of sum, esse (cf. the English word being), two nouns or a noun and an adjective in the ablative case can function as an ablative absolute: for instance, Tarquiniō rēge, with Tarquinius [being] king (W 193–94, ER 349, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419a).

116. contrā Vēientēs – Veii, Rome's nearest Etruscan neighbor, had been struggling with Rome for several years over supremacy in the region around the Tiber. See Appendix A: Maps.

suscēpērunt – perfect of suscipiō, -ere.

117. senātuī et populō – datives of indirect object with the present participle prōmittentēs.

per sē omne certāmen implendum [esse] – indirect statement (W 202–4, ER 366, LFA 117, A&G §577–84). The future passive participle implendum is indicating action after that of prōmittentēs: promising that the entire battle would be carried out by themselves. A more usual formation would employ sē as the accusative subject and a future active infinitive: prōmittentēs sē omne certāmen implētūrōs esse: promising that they would carry out the entire battle.

profectī – perfect participle of the deponent verb proficīscor, -ficīscī.

118. quī singulī magnōrum exercituum ducēs esse dēbērent – The imperfect subjunctive is often used to denote an unfulfilled obligation (A&G §439b) or an action that was possible or conceivable in past time (A&G §446).

119. Ūnus omnīnō superfuit ex tantā familiā – The date of the Cremera disaster—and indeed the tradition itself—may be confirmed by the fact that the name Fabius, which appears in the Fasti (a list of consuls and important events) frequently until 479 BCE, is missing for the next eleven years. The battle may have been a mission that the Fabii volunteered for, which was aimed at raiding and seizing an enemy stronghold. The number 306—and other details—perhaps developed to connect and synchronize the event with the Battle of Thermopylae in Greece, which occurred at nearly the same time.

120. dūcī – present passive infinitive of dūcō, -ere.

potuerat – pluperfect of possum, posse.

121. habitus est – perfect passive of habēō, -ēre.

inventā sunt cīvium capita CXVII milia CCCXIX – This is the number that Livy gives for the census of 459 BCE. It may be meant to include women and children.

inventā sunt – perfect passive of inveniō, -īre; the subject is cīvium capita CXVII milia CCCXIX.

Chapter XVII

122. Sequentī annō – Eutropius means the year following the census mentioned in the previous paragraph, that is 558 BCE.

cum . . . Rōmānus obsidērētur exercitus – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFN 260–61, CLC 73, A&G §546).

123. obsidērētur – The Roman consul Lucius Minucius was trapped in the valley below Mount Algidus when the Aequi seized the narrow pass at the ridge of the mountain. The Aequi were an Italic people in northeast Latium who were one of Rome's most implacable enemies during the early Republic. See Appendix A: Maps.

L. Quīntius Cincinnātus – The usual spelling of Cincinnatus's gens name is Quīnctius. The tradition presents him as the idealized Roman: he reluctantly assumes power, decisively defeats the enemy, and quickly lays aside his office and returns to farming. Nevertheless, the historicity of his person and his defeat of the Aequi are very likely.

124. est factus – perfect passive of faciō, -ere.

quī agrum quattuor iūgerum possidēns manibus suis colēbat – Agrum is the object of both the participle possidēns and the verb colēbat: who, possessing a field of four iugera, used to cultivate [it]. iūgerum – genitive of quality (A&G §345.b).

manibus suis – ablative of means or instrument (W 116–17, ER 346, LFA 20, LFNM 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409).

125. cum in opere et arāns esset inventus – cum clause (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFNM 486, CLC 70, A&G §546). opere et arāns esset – A single idea expressed by two nouns and a conjunction (at work and plowing = at work with his plow) is called hendiadys. esset inventus – pluperfect passive subjunctive of inveniō, -īre.

sūdōre dētersō – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). dētersō – perfect passive participle of dētergeō, -ēre.

togam praetextam accēpit – The toga praetexta was a purple- or crimson-bordered toga worn by high-ranking magistrates. It was most likely of Etruscan origin.

126. accēpit – perfect of accipiō, -ere.

caesīs hostibus – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, CLC 218, LFNM 298–99, A&G §419). caesīs – perfect passive participle of caedō, -ere.

Chapter XVIII

127. ab urbe conditā – Giving the number of years since the founding of the city is another standard method for establishing the date. Notice the variety with which Eutropius gives the date in the last four paragraphs.

conditā – perfect passive participle of condō, -ere.

imperium cōsulāre – subject of cessāvit.

128. prō duōbus cōsulibus decem factī sunt, quī summam potestātem habērent, decemvirī nōminātī – The Commission of Ten was established to publish the previously unwritten Roman legal code, to protect the plebeians from the arbitrary exercise of power. The regular magistracies were suspended so that the commission could carry out its work without appeal. The decemvirate lasted for two years—according to tradition, there was a good commission in power for the first year and a tyrannical one in power for the second. After a second secession by the plebeians, the decemviri abdicated.

factī sunt – perfect passive of faciō, -ere; the subject is decem[virī].

quī . . . habērent – purpose clause introduced by the relative pronoun (W 328, LFNM 509, CLC 179, A&G §531.2): to hold.

129. cum . . . bene ēgissent – cum clause (adversative) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 505, LFNM 266–67, A&G §549): although. ēgissent – pluperfect subjunctive of agō, -ere.

130. ūnus ex hīs – Most cardinal numbers are followed by ex or dē plus the ablative to indicate a specific part of a group (W 125, A&G §346c).

Ap. Claudius . . . filiam virginem corrumpere voluit – Appius Claudius was the leader of the Commission of Ten. Though a historical person, he is portrayed as a stock tyrant in the Roman tradition—the foil to the idealized leadership of Cincinnatus.

Virgīnī cuiusdam – genitives modifying filiam virginem.

quī – The antecedent is Virgīnī, not Ap. Claudius.

131. contrā Latīnōs in monte Algidō – Eutropius is mistaken here. The battle of Mons Algidus was fought against the Aequi, not the Latins. The Romans, Latins, and Hernici (another people from Latium), in fact, were in a defensive alliance during this period. This so-called Triple Alliance had been fighting the Aequi and Volsci for the preceding thirty years.

militārat – contracted form of the pluperfect indicative militāverat (A&G §181). See note on rēgnāsset, line 29.

132. quam pater occīdit – The relative quī, quae, quod often stands at the beginning of a sentence or clause, serving to connect it with the preceding one (LFA 204, CLC 309, A&G §308f).

133. regressus – perfect participle of the deponent verb regredior, -gredī.

Sublāta est – perfect passive of sufferō, -ferre; potestās is the subject.

decemvirīs – dative of separation (W 291, ER 343, CLC 325, A&G §381). Some compound verbs meaning to take away govern the dative of separation.

134. damnātī sunt – perfect passive of damnō, -āre.

Chapter XIX

135. ab urbe conditā – This is the same method of expressing the date as in chapter XVIII. conditā – perfect passive participle of condō, -ere.

Fidēnātēs contrā Rōmānōs rebellāvērunt – Fidenae, a stronghold of the Etruscan city Veii, was five miles north of Rome on the Tiber. According to Livy, it revolted twice with the help of Veii: first in 335 BCE and again in 326–325. Most modern historians accept the latter date and take the former to be a doublet (that is, a competing version of the battle that was later incorporated into the main tradition). Eutropius mentions only one revolt and gives it the considerably earlier date of 438 BCE.

137. ut Fidēnae sextō, Vēi octāvō decimō miliāriō absint – result clause (W 237–38, ER 361, LFA 92, LFNM 319–20, CLC 130, A&G §537.1). Fidēnae . . . Vēi – The names of some cities are plural, such as Bāiae, Coriolī, Fidēnae, Pompēiī, and Veīī.

138. Coniūnxērunt sē hīs et Volscī – The Volsci continued to plague the Romans throughout this and much of the next century.

hīs – dative of indirect object: to these [people] (also in line 154).

139. Mam. Aemiliō dictātōre et L. Quīntiō Cincinnātō magistrō equitum – ablatives absolute. Since classical Latin lacks the present participle of sum, esse (cf. the English word being), two nouns or a noun and an adjective in the ablative case can function as an ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 349, LFA 33, LFNM 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419a). L. Quīntiō Cincinnātō – the dictator from chapter XVII.

140. victī – perfect passive participle of vincō, -ere.

captae – perfect passive participle of capio, -ere.

excīsaē – perfect passive participle of excīdō, -ere.

Chapter XX

141. Post vīginti deinde annōs Vēientānī rebellāverunt – Veii had supported the revolts of Fidenae (traditionally in 335 and 326–325 BCE). Although Eutropius mentions only one revolt in the preceding chapter, he seems to be using the end of the second traditional revolt as the point of reference here.

142. missus est – perfect passive of mittō, -ere; the subject is dictātor.

Fūrius Camillus – The Roman tradition portrays Camillus as the statesman par excellence. He defeats the Etruscans at Veii, remains loyal to his city even after exile, recovers the Roman ransom from the Gauls, and rebuilds the city after the siege is lifted. The historical Camillus did, in fact, conquer Veii and was instrumental in Rome's recovery after 390 BCE.

Fūrius Camillus – in apposition to dictātor.

143. cīvitātem diū obsidēns cēpit – Cīvitātem is the object of both the present participle obsidēns and the verb cēpit: besieging the city for a long time, he captured [it]. cēpit – perfect of capiō, -ere.

diū obsidēns – According to tradition, the siege lasted for ten years (the same length as the siege of Troy). It ended only after Camillus forced his way into the citadel by digging a tunnel through solid rock. See the boxed text The Romans Tunnel into Veii's Citadel and Interrupt a Sacrifice to Juno, page 26.

antīquissimam . . . dītissimam – in apposition to cīvitātem.

144. eam – The antecedent is cīvitātem [Vēientānōrum].

Faliscōs – Eutropius may here be confusing the name of the inhabitants (Faliscī) with the name of their city (Faleriī).

commōta est – perfect passive of commoveō, -ēre; the subject is invidia.

145. quasi praedam male dīvisisset – Quasi plus the subjunctive is sometimes used to show ostensible or supposed cause (A&G §540.2): on the grounds that he had divided the spoils unfairly. dīvisisset – pluperfect subjunctive of dīvidō, -ere.
146. cīvitāte – ablative of separation (W 163, ER 348, LFA 214, A&G §400): from the city.

147. Galli Senonēs – According to Livy, the marauding bands of Celts that captured Rome were the Senones, who had recently come into Italy and established themselves on the northern Adriatic coast.

148. secūti – perfect participle of the deponent verb sequor, sequi.

149. dēfendī – passive infinitive of dēfendō, -ere.

potuit – perfect of possum, posse.

quod cum diū obsēdissent et iam Rōmānī famē labōrārent – cum clauses (circumstantial) (W 255–56, ER 361, LFA 504, LFN 260–61, CLC 73, A&G §546). The first verb is a pluperfect subjunctive (had besieged); the second is an imperfect subjunctive (were suffering). quod cum – Quod stands first in the clause because it is used here as et id (LFA 204, A&G §308f). obsēdissent – pluperfect subjunctive of obsideō, -ēre. famē – ablative of means or instrument (W 116–17, ER 346, LFA 20, LFN 486, CLC 326–27, A&G §409).

150. acceptō aurō – ablative absolute (W 193–94, ER 348, LFA 33, LFN 298–99, CLC 218, A&G §419). acceptō – perfect passive participle of accipio, -ere.

nē Capitōlium obsidērent – negative purpose clause (W 229–30, ER 362, LFA 77, LFN 40–41, CLC 221, A&G §531.1) after acceptō aurō.

151. recessērunt – perfect of recēdō, -ere.

152. Gallis superventum est – Verbs that govern the dative in the active voice (e.g., Gallis supervēnērunt, they came upon the Gauls in surprise) retain the dative when used impersonally in the passive voice (Gallis superventum est, it was come upon the Gauls in surprise = the Gauls were come upon in surprise) (LFA 496, LFN 503, A&G §372). superventum est – perfect passive of superveniō, -īre.

153. victi sunt – perfect passive of vincō, -ere.

secūtus eōs Camillus ita cecidit ut et aurum . . . revocāret – The tradition that Camillus, who had been in exile, defeated the retreating Gauls and recaptured the city's ransom probably arose to restore Roman honor. By placing him outside the city during the battle of Allia, the story also relieves the hero of any culpability in the disaster.

secūtus eōs Camillus ita cecīdit – Eōs is governed by both the participle secūtus and the verb cecīdit: Camillus, having followed them, slaughtered [them]. secūtus – perfect participle of the deponent verb sequor, sequi. cecīdit – perfect of caedō, -ere.

154. ut et aurum . . . et omnia . . . militāria signa revocāret – result clause (W 237–38, ER 361, LFA 92, LFNM 319–20, CLC 130, A&G §537.1). The verb revocāret governs two objects, aurum and militāria signa, each of which is modified by a relative clause.

militāria signa revocāret – The loss of military standards in battle is considered a great dishonor.

quod – The antecedent is aurum.

hīs – dative of indirect object: to them (i.e., the Gauls).

datum fuerat – pluperfect passive indicative of dō, dare; the auxiliaries fuissem, fuissēs, etc., are sometimes used for essem, essēs, etc., in the formation of the pluperfect passive (A&G §184, note).

cēperant – pluperfect of capiō, -ere.

155. ingressus est – perfect of the deponent verb ingredior, -gredi.

H. H. SCULLARD ON THE INDOMITABLE ROMAN SPIRIT

The city was destroyed; its internal stability was shaken; there was no army of defense; the alliance with the Latins and Hernici had collapsed; the Gauls might return. But in these dark days the spirit of the Roman people did not waver. Wise leadership and the patriotism of the citizen body saved Rome. . . . So Rome set her shoulder to the grueling task of reconstruction at home and abroad; that she accomplished so much is due largely to the wise direction of Camillus.
